Professorship in “Health and Nutrition Psychology” at the Department of Food · Nutrition · Facilities

What to expect

- Your teaching will focus on the foundations of psychology – and especially health and nutrition psychology.
- In the process, you will also teach your students everything they need to know about the relevant statistical and scientific methodology.
- By confidently delivering courses in English, you will also support our internationalisation strategy in this context.
- In addition to your teaching activities, you will have the great opportunity to complement and expand the key research areas in our interdisciplinary department.
- Last but not least, you will reinforce our efforts to continuously enhance our portfolio of online teaching and learning arrangements in higher education and continuing education.

Your background

- Your expertise is based on your degree in psychology; human medicine specialising in psychiatry or psychosomatics; nutrition science; or nutrition and home economics.
- In addition, you completed an excellent doctorate in nutrition psychology, and have extensive expertise in psychological counselling.
- You are familiar with applying for and implementing research projects – experience in acquiring external funds would be a valuable asset.
- We also value your willingness to support the department by contributing to self-government and academic continuing education, and by developing study programmes.
- An extensive network in academia and the world of practice rounds off your compelling profile.

We offer you

- You can look forward to a permanent W2 professorship on civil servant conditions – with the attractive opportunity to contribute your strengths in teaching, research and university management.
- The framework conditions we have created will enable you to strike a good work-life-family balance.
- Our extensive portfolio of professional teaching development will enable you to develop your skills on an ongoing basis.
